Form 990, Part III, Line 4a - Program Service Accomplishments

Education Program Support: Major activities including payment for buses in support of the 4th Grader outreach program, entitling every student to free entrance to national parks; some 20K students and a cost of $276.5K for buses and volunteer staff support was expended -- payment of 188 stipends totaling over $66K to students volunteering for the NPS in science and education projects that include wildlife research, plant restoration biology, archeology, curricular-based education programs, outreach to under-served communities -- support to 10 different artists in 2018 focused on bridging young people to the outdoors as well as the construction of art displays at Peter Strauss Ranch -- support to stage climbing walls at mini-"rec fests" at 9 events largely centered in and around downtown Los Angeles, routinely in conjunction with CicLAVia events to connect urban residents with recreational opportunities in the Santa Monica Mountains. One of the most visible projects is the summer employment program called SAMO Youth; with the help of the National Park Foundation, REI and the Annenberg Foundation, it offers summer

work opportunities to outstanding young high school scholars in L.A. and Ventura Counties, exposing them to the National Park mission and career possibilities ($163K). In Nov 2018, some 83% of Federal parklands were consumed in the Woolsey Fire, severely impacting program sites, proving the value of program partnerships such as that with California State Parks, to allow the shift of school program resources to other sites.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4b - Program Service Accomplishments

Park Facilities Management and Construction: Two new and very important programs launched in 2017 came to full fruition in 2018. On behalf of the National Park Service and the La Kretz Center for California Conservation Science (UCLA), a 1400 square-ft building offer dedicated research space, a self-contained necropsy facility for wildlife researchers, field-research equipment storage as well as housing for long and short-term research visitors was completed. By assuming the role as fiduciary for the project, design and construction were streamlined to reduce costs by as much as $500K. In addition, the facility was the sole structure to survive with virtually no damage in the Rocky Oaks unit during the Woolsey Fire -- possibly a testament to its good design and construction: costs in 2018 amounted to $188.9K. In addition, the coordinator for trail volunteer projects completed her first full year: significant rains in the first months of 2018 prompted notable damage to trails that required repair and cooperation among a variety of agencies and volunteer groups. One of the most significant project under this program was the completion of the Backbone Trail Overlook extension, thanks to the financial support of REI and work contracted by the Fund from the California Conservation Corps. The Woolsey Fire in November 2018 resulted in the destruction of several key bridges on the Backbone Trail -- work that will need to be addressed in the coming year.

Park Stewardship and Other Special Initiatives: The Santa Monica Mountains Fund (SMMF) provides yearly support for various volunteer programs that support the National Park Service and its partner park organizations in the Santa Monica Mountains, such as the Mounted Volunteer Program, the Mountain Bike Unit, and a variety of other volunteer activities. In conjunction with the Urban Wildlife Initiative, one unusual volunteer initiative centered on "Scat Parties", during which citizen scientist volunteers would dissect scat to determine the relative composition of diets among animals such as coyotes and bobcats in downtown areas of Los Angeles. 2018 marked the full deployment of the "Nature Neighbor" program, which put at the park's disposal an Urban Park Conservationist to work with citizens living in and around the maintains, to promote park-friendly practices ($73.6K): top priority for the immediate future is educating park neighbors about the accidental poisoning of park animals and raptors through the indiscriminate use of rodenticides. A grant from the John Logan Foundation totalling $50K marked a milestone in this effort, representing as it did the the first major external grant for the program. A new feature in this effort was the creation of a "pledge" that urged people to sign-on with a promise not to use rodenticides. One factor contributing to 2018's costs was additional compensation to coordinate with UCLA in the conduct of a park visitor use survey. The Fund continued in its second year of managing reception and mail services on behalf of the park -- due to staffing shortages, the program was expanded to provide clerical support for the park's education program as well. This enlarged the cost of the program for the year to $26.2K, with the Fund matching the NPS contribution to the effort.

Routine costs such air-time to capture and download movement data retrieved from mountain lion collars was purchased on behalf of the National Park Service, as well as the purchase of several new wildlife tracking collars and the refurbishment of others. We also paid for the construction of a transportable mountain-lion cage trap. As more attention turned toward the research coming out of the wildlife programs at Santa Monica Mountains, offers of publication from distinguished scientific journals become more frequent and with those, the costs of publication follows -- the Fund spent over a thousand dollars in 2018 to support the reproduction of color photos and charts in a published article on bobcats and anticoagulants (along with reprints) in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, possibly one of the world's most preeminent scientific publications.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4a - Program Service Accomplishments

Education Program Support: Major activities including payment for buses in support of the 4th Grader outreach program, entitling every student to free entrance to national parks; some 20K students and a cost of $276.5K for buses and volunteer staff support was expended -- payment of 188 stipends totaling over $66K to students volunteering for the NPS in science and education projects that include wildlife research, plant restoration biology, archeology, curricular- based education programs, outreach to under-served communities -- support to 10 different artists in 2018 focused on bridging young people to the outdoors as well as the construction of art displays at Peter Strauss Ranch -- support to stage climbing walls at mini-"rec fests" at 9 events largely centered in and around downtown Los Angeles, routinely in conjunction with CicLAVia events to connect urban residents with recreational opportunities in the Santa Monica Mountains. One of the most visible projects is the summer employment program called SAMO Youth; with the help of the National Park Foundation, REI and the Annenberg Foundation, it offers summer

work opportunities to outstanding young high school scholars in L.A. and Ventura Counties, exposing them to the National Park mission and career possibilities ($163K). In Nov 2018, some 83% of Federal parklands were consumed in the Woolsey Fire, severely impacting program sites, proving the value of program partnerships such as that with California State Parks, to allow the shift of school program resources to other sites.

Park Facilities Management and Construction: Two new and very important programs launched in 2017 came to full fruition in 2018. On behalf of the National Park Service and the La Kretz Center for California Conservation Science (UCLA), a 1400 square-ft building offer dedicated research space, a self-contained necropsy facility for wildlife researchers, field-research equipment storage as well as housing for long and short-term research visitors was completed. By assuming the role as fiduciary for the project, design and construction were streamlined to reduce costs by as much as $500K. In addition, the facility was the sole structure to survive with virtually no damage in the Rocky Oaks unit during the Woolsey Fire -- possibly a testament to its good design and construction: costs in 2018 amounted to $188.9K. In addition, the coordinator for trail volunteer projects completed her first full year: significant rains in the first months of 2018 prompted notable damage to trails that required repair and cooperation among a variety of agencies and volunteer groups. One of the most significant project under this program was the completion of the Backbone Trail Overlook extension, thanks to the financial support of REI and work contracted by the Fund from the California Conservation Corps. The Woolsey Fire in November 2018 resulted in the destruction of several key bridges on the Backbone Trail -- work that will need to be addressed in the coming year.

Park Stewardship and Other Special Initiatives: The Santa Monica Mountains Fund (SMMF) provides yearly support for various volunteer programs that support the National Park Service and its partner park organizations in the Santa Monica Mountains, such as the Mounted Volunteer Program, the Mountain Bike Unit, and a variety of other volunteer activities. In conjunction with the Urban Wildlife Initiative, one unusual volunteer initiative centered on "Scat Parties", during which citizen scientist volunteers would dissect scat to determine the relative composition of diets among animals such as coyotes and bobcats in downtown areas of Los Angeles. 2018 marked the full deployment of the "Nature Neighbor" program, which put at the park's disposal an Urban Park Conservationist to work with citizens living in and around the maintains, to promote park-friendly practices ($73.6K): top priority for the immediate future is educating park neighbors about the accidental poisoning of park animals and raptors through the indiscriminate use of rodenticides. A grant from the John Logan Foundation totalling $50K marked a milestone in this effort, representing as it did the the first major external grant for the program. A new feature in this effort was the creation of a "pledge" that urged people to sign-on with a promise not to use rodenticides. One factor contributing to 2018's costs was additional compensation to coordinate with UCLA in the conduct of a park visitor use survey. The Fund continued in its second year of managing reception and mail services on behalf of the park -- due to staffing shortages, the program was expanded to provide clerical support for the park's education program as well. This enlarged the cost of the program for the year to $26.2K, with the Fund matching the NPS contribution to the effort.

geographic information system data registration, etc., the Fund donated to the National Park Service some $75K to support the principal salaries of the biologists attached to the mountain lion research program; thanks to a grant from Lush Cosmetics, the Santa Monica Mountains Fund purchased wildlife tracking units to allow study of urban wildlife movements. Routine costs such air-time to capture and download movement data retrieved from mountain lion collars was purchased on behalf of the National Park Service, as well as the purchase of several new wildlife tracking collars and the refurbishment of others. We also paid for the construction of a transportable mountain-lion cage trap. As more attention turned toward the research coming out of the wildlife programs at Santa Monica Mountains, offers of publication from distinguished scientific journals become more frequent and with those, the costs of publication follows -- the Fund spent over a thousand dollars in 2018 to support the reproduction of color photos and charts in a published article on bobcats and anticoagulants (along with reprints) in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, possibly one of the world's most preeminent scientific publications.
